Once you have a few driving schools in mind, you should contact them and ask about their instructors. Find out how long they have been teaching, what their qualifications are, and what their teaching methods are.

It is also important to find an instructor who you feel comfortable with. This is someone who you can trust to teach you how to drive safely and who you can feel comfortable asking questions.

Before your first behind-the-wheel driving lesson, you should do some preparation. This will help you to get the most out of your lesson and to avoid any surprises.

Here are a few things you should do before your first lesson:

- Get a good night's sleep. You will need to be alert and focused during your lesson.
- Eat a healthy breakfast. This will give you the energy you need to learn.
- Bring your driver's permit. You will need this to show your instructor.
- Be prepared to answer questions. Your instructor will likely ask you some questions about your driving experience and your goals for learning how to drive.
- Be open to feedback. Your instructor is there to help you learn. Be open to their feedback and suggestions.

Your first behind-the-wheel driving lesson will likely start with a review of the basics. Your instructor will go over things like how to start the car, how to use the pedals, and how to steer.

Once you have reviewed the basics, your instructor will start to have you drive in a variety of different situations. This may include driving in a parking lot, driving on a quiet road, and driving in traffic.

As you progress through your lessons, your instructor will gradually give you more responsibility. You will start to drive on busier roads, and you will start to learn how to handle more complex driving situations.

By the end of your lessons, you should be able to drive safely and confidently in a variety of different situations.

Here are a few tips for learning how to drive:

- Be patient. Learning how to drive takes time and practice. Don't get discouraged if you don't get it right away.
- Practice regularly. The more you practice, the better you will become at driving. Try to practice at least once a week.
- Find a good instructor. A good instructor can make a big difference in your learning experience. Find an instructor who is patient, knowledgeable, and supportive.
- Be safe. Always wear your seatbelt and obey the traffic laws.
- Have fun! Learning how to drive should be a fun experience. Enjoy the process and don't put too much pressure on yourself.

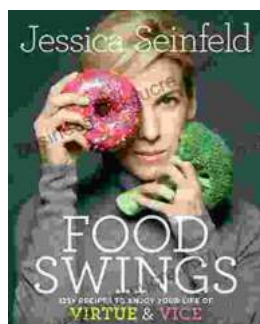

Behind-the-wheel driving lessons are an essential part of learning how to drive. By following the tips in this article, you can find the right instructor, prepare for your first lesson, and learn how to drive safely and confidently.
